Accreditation of Powder Coaters

Coming Soon 'The Mark of a Professional'

The AISF is launching a new Accredited Powder Coater program (APC), with a view to promoting excellence of business standards and performance consistency across the Industry.

“With some 1,000 businesses practicing as self-regulated powder coaters, ranging from large producers/importers of metal, independent job shops, OEM's, and ‘the down the road coater’, there is a huge disparity in performance and quality within the industry” says AISF Federal President Mr Peter Mallios. “there is an increasing need for a more systematic and uniform approach in a very fragmented and competitive market place to achieve improved or higher levels of quality and consistency” he said.

This professional development program enables businesses to implement a best practice accreditation system to control their powder coating processes.

The APC program will be used to monitor, assess and confirm a coaters capabilities to comply with all applicable Australian Standards, the Building Code of Australia and other relevant industry specifications and conditions.

The accreditation system will provide guidance on mandatory and recommended process options, it will also measure the technical competencies of the applicator, and provide support to AISF members to achieve accredited status.

AISF Accredited status indicates, to customers and industry professionals alike, a high level of assurance that an applicator has technical skills and competency, follows quality processes and displays ethical behaviour that underpins a strong commitment to excellence.

Look for the special “Mark of a Professional” logo to confirm if your powder coater of choice is accredited by the AISF.
